Rant. I've been into specialty coffee roasters for about a dozen years, primarily espresso based drinks. I remember when bags were 16oz. Then the cost of everything went up, i get that, roasters complained that 16oz of green usually meant about 12oz of roasted, or at least that was the excuse for moving to a 12oz bag, although the price stayed about the same - lets say it used to cost $12 for ...

There are two things I love for making a cup of pour over. One is a no-frills Melitta plastic cone filter holder that's only four bucks and works like a charm. But when I want to get fancy about it, I use an amazing pour over set I got as a gift last year: the Stagg [X] Pour Over Set from the brewing gurus at Fellow.

Sour cream: You can use Greek yogurt instead of sour cream, if needed. Egg: Always use fresh eggs in baked goods. Butter: Unsalted works best. You can use salted butter, but reduce the salt to 1/2 teaspoon. Brown sugar: Dark brown sugar is recommended, but you can use light brown sugar if necessary. Pecans: You can use another type of nut for the crumble topping, including almonds or walnuts.
