Illusions And Delusions Of The

Both illusion and delusion are nouns. An illusion is a misperception resulting from a trick of the senses, or something that is not as it appears. A hallucination is one type of illusion. A delusion refers to a dangerously deceptive idea. Generally, delusion is only used in contexts that involve a dangerous idea. Since delusion and dangerous both begin with the same letter, this usage should be simple to remember.

Illusions happen when a person with dementia misinterprets actual objects in the room. A throw pillow is a cat. A garden hose is a snake. Poor lighting that creates more shadows can also create illusions. A shadow on the floor may be misinterpreted as a hole. Delusions are false beliefs usually arising from fears. Sometimes, delusions occur early in dementia as the person tries to make sense out of a situation.

Difference between hallucinations, illusions, and delusions?

Hallucinations and delusions are similar in that they are both false but seem very real to the person experiencing them. Both are caused by certain mental illnesses but can also be triggered by medical conditions, injuries, or by no known cause at all. A hallucination involves the senses and feels real but is not.
